Subject: Courses in Naval Aviation

25X1

1. Courses in naval aviation for advanced officers are being given at Riga. The object of these courses is to train officers in all categories of naval aviation in the duties of commanders of units and sub-units.
2. There is one course which covers general subjects -- such as mathematics, mechanics, and the basis of electro-technology -- which is attended by all of the officers. In subsequent teaching more time is devoted to solving tactical problems on the scale of an air unit, in combined operations with ships and naval units, and to the duties of the staff of a unit in administration and training. Students are taught land tactics also. The chief object of this course is the teaching of air tactics. Some time is devoted to the study of methods employed in the training of sub-units.
3. Aviation Major General P. P. Kravtsov is the officer in charge of the courses.
4. The courses have been given for several years. During the war they were conducted at Minsk Stavropol Province. In July 1946 they were moved to Riga.
